SPECIAL COLLECTIONS: NEXT - 7th/8th MARCH - CAFOD LENTEN COLLECTION

EMERGENCE INTO GOD'S FREEDOM & GRACE

Strong presumptions of freedom, responsibility and moral awareness figure highly in the framework of our religious heritage. Everything seems to hinge on responsibility for sin requiring the need for redemption and forgiveness. In Western Christianity in particular, as distinct from Orthodox Christianity, the main way of understanding Jesus, his death & his resurrection has been & largely still is in terms of saving us from sin. The Orthodox tradition sees things more in terms of Jesus as the agent of divinisation - bringing humanity into union with God & by this union freeing us from sin. Although never mainstream, Franciscan theology, thanks to Duns Scotus (14th cent) also understood Christ as Plan A (union with creation in love from the very beginning) not just as plan B, (a response necessitated by our messing up through sin).

Free will and moral responsibility is one of the big philosophical questions. The prevailing opinion within secular academia seems to be that while acknowledging a strong & all-encompassing determinism it is still personally & socially important to respect the "common sense" assumptions of freedom and responsibility. And questions are being asked now about how our "freedom" may be further undermined by social media. This is the way we have evolved and this is the way we are, remembering that our action or inaction will always be part of any outcome. Through faith we recognise that only God can be truly free. "You shall know the truth & the truth will set you free" says Jesus. Faith awareness acting through our creative imagination is the beginning of freedom. God has imprisoned all in disobedience only to have mercy on all writes St Paul. A genuine awareness of grace flowers from the "prison" of a deterministic universe. In our Scriptures, (Genesis & Paul) we see attempts to grapple with these human experiences in relation to the Divine. By evolution we have emerged into self-consciousness in relation to others & to the world and through them to God. Strategies for survival (e.g. deception & male proliferation of sexual partners) that once were useful later became a disadvantage in more intimate & complex societies. The progress of humanity in self-consciousness was also a "fall" into experiences of culpability, alienation and rejection. The gain of the ability to compare and contrast, to determine "good" & "evil" was also the loss of an initial experience of unity and harmony with all that is. We are now masters of analysis & dissection but less skilled at synthesis, at putting people, communities & things back together.

On the intellectual level we struggle with these huge mysteries and questions. We do not have certainty. There is so much we do not understand and cannot know. Not knowing (agnosticism), open mindedness and an appreciation that while many theories cannot be proved to be true, some can be shown to be false or at least inadequate, these are now common secular approaches to life's mysteries. This is why faith, trust (hope) & acceptance (love) of reality are the only appropriate ways of "knowing" God.

On the practical level we know by shared experience & wisdom that attitudes, words and actions have consequences, good or bad, in terms of our personal well-being, our social relationships, our co-existence with the animals and the planet and in terms of our relationship with ultimate reality, with the Divine, with God. The stories we tell ourselves, the words we say, the things we do help or hinder. They can take us upwards into higher levels of connection, consciousness, relatedness, into deeper, richer experiences of life, love and truth. They can also drag us back down to lower levels where we are in danger of losing the precious little freedom that we have. The dangers of temptation are real.

Only God, the true Absolute, who is in, with and through all, whose very being, in Holy Trinity, is love (is loving & relating) us can help us relate to others & the world in a way that doesn't make them "gods". Absolutes in this finite existence only create tyrannies and merciless competition for survival. To enable joy, love and peace in this life you have to be able to sacrifice it, to let it go in favour of the Divine who is always both immanent (within) and transcendent (beyond) creation. (DMA)
