KEEP CALM: KEEP TAKING THE MEDICINE OF THE PRESENT MOMENT AND TRUST IN GOD (Part One)

One of the glaringly obvious things from the Gospels is that Jesus's relationship with his Father (and our Father) was nourished overwhelmingly by his connection with creation and with people. Jesus's words and parables spring from nature, domestic life, and the simple, predominantly rural economy: lilies of the field, birds of the air, sheep and shepherds, seed and sower, a woman sweeping the floor, builders laying foundations etc. He attended the synagogue of course but invariably the Gospels record only the conflicts that ensued. Jesus taught in the temple but there is not a single mention of Jesus participating in official temple worship. In fact, he caused a major disturbance by driving out the money changers and the merchants with a whip of chords! When Jesus prays, he often goes off to the hills by himself. And he teaches us, literally or metaphorically to "go to our private room and pray to our Father in that secret place." (Matt 6:6)

The Church rightly encourages us to read the Scriptures, especially the Gospels. Indeed, as the Second Vatican Council (1962-5) declared: "Ignorance of the Scriptures is ignorance of Christ". However, the truth is that the simplicity and power of the Gospel witness has been overlaid by centuries of "churchianity" with its unavoidable entanglement of both "nourishing wheat and poisonous weeds" (Matt 13:24). We have had an overdose of outer authority but little nurturing of inner experience and the personal authority that it gives. We've become dependent on middle management (clerics like myself) who mostly haven't had the natural training and experience that ordinary life affords. Again, the witness of Scripture has been ignored. For St Paul wrote of a church leader: (he must be) a man who manages his own household well and brings up his children obedient and well behaved: how can a man who does not understand how to manage his own household take care of the Church of God? (1 Tim. 3:4)

So, despite all the best intentions our relationship with God has to some extent become second-hand. It has been conditioned, controlled, and perhaps reduced to our passive reception of Sacraments, our attendance, or more hopefully, our participation in worship and our following of instructions. Of course, genuine trust in God and love of God has always been able to grow in these circumstances, no doubt. But the consequence has been that most of the positive feelings and associations of God's presence, peace & acceptance have been formed around physical attendance at church. And for many of us this fusion has been welded together since early childhood and so is deeply embedded. This has been largely positive and helpful for people.

However there have been downsides. We feel lost and spiritually disorientated when we can no longer get to church! It has also nurtured an unhealthy "co-dependency" between clergy and laity. Clergy get recognition, respect, authority, and power, and of course a living! Laity don't have the burden of responsibility and the relationship with God can be made safe and manageable. This very subtly nurtures our sense of self-righteousness and reinforces the illusion that we are in some way in control. We can more easily satisfy ourselves that we have done the works that God wants (John 6:28). And there is something more that I've noticed over the years. The strong link between our relationship with God and attending church that is presumed and encouraged by the Church, hasn't worked for everyone. Many people don't meet the requirements, can't jump the hurdles or don't feel listened to or accepted. And if they are still coming to church it is because of the community, the love, friendship and support that is offered. The archaic and clumsy language of the Liturgy is suffered rather than enjoyed and the implicit medieval worldview is perceived as quaint but largely irrelevant.
